The ultimate chase game 'Outline' positively defies boredom, because each time a player masters one stage without being caught the game brain moves on and on to increasingly more complex stages. Continuously tempting the player to feed its insatiable appetite.

Each stage format is based upon a grid of squares and oblongs ranging from simple to complex arrangements and the player or 'pilot' scores points by outlining the shapes which are then 'filled in' with colour using exciting graphic and audio effects.

All the time the pilot must avoid the 'chasers' whose computer brain persistently tracks and attempts to eliminate him. As the game develops it continuously introduces new phenomena to the play, including speech as well as greater obstacles for the player such as 'the asteroid zone' and 'the missile firing chasers.'
